

BRAZIL – General Information

CLIMATE: Brazil is marked by highly varied climates. It goes from the humidity of the Amazon Region, the dry heat of the Northeastern region and the permanently pleasant warm weather of most of the coastal area, to cool evening temperatures in many parts of the plateau and a temperate climate in the South. The seasons in Brazil, are the opposite from Europe and United States. The medium annual temperature is 28° C on the North area and 20° C on the South Area.

VISAS & PASSPORTS: An entry visa is not required for holders of passports from European or South American countries. As a matter of reciprocity, a visa is required for those from North America. For further information about the necessary documentation and where visas can be obtained, please consult the local Brazilian embassy. Tourist visas can be renewed for a period of 180 days per year. Passports must be valid for at least six months after the planned date of arrival in Brazil.

CURRENCY: The currency in Brazil is the Real (abbreviated to R$). Dollars and traveler's checks can easily be changed in hotels, authorized banks and travel agencies. International credit cards are accepted in most hotels, shops and restaurants. The exchange rate is floating.

LANGUAGE: The national language is the Portuguese.

TIME ZONES: Brazil covers three time zones. The time in Brasilia is the official time in Brazil, usually 3 hours behind GMT (London). This changes with the start of Summer Time (the clocks go forward an hour).

SHOPPING: Brazil offers a great variety for shopping: from boutiques to hippie markets; from precious and semi-precious stones, to creative handcrafts. Shopping centers are open from 10am to 10pm.

HEALTHY: It is recommended to have the vaccination against yellow fever, for tourists that intend to visit the following Brazilian states: Acre, Amazonas, Amapá, Federal District, Goiás, Maranhão, Mato Grosso do Sul, Pará, Rondônia, Roraima and Tocantins. It is obligatory the vaccination against yellow fever for those passengers coming from endemic zones. For further information please consult the Brazilian Embassy of your country.

TIPS: The service charge is included in the bills in most restaurants and bars. Therefore, tips are optional and are usually between 10% and 15% of the bill. For portage service, it is recommended the equivalent to USD 1.00.

CUISINE: The Brazilian cuisine is very rich and varied with Portuguese and African influences. The most typical Brazilian dish is the "feijoada": served in big casseroles of black beans with a tick juice cooked together with salty pork meat. It is garnished with manioc flour, rice and slices of fresh orange. There is also the famous Brazilian barbecue, usually served in restaurant in a "rodízio" system, where several kinds of grilled meats are brought to the tables and cut directly on the plates of the costumers.

The food from Bahia has stronger condiments. There is the famous "Vatapá": made with shrimps, fish oil, coconut milk, bread and oil.

The national drink is the famous "Caipirinha": made with an alcohol called cachaça, mixed with lemon, sugar and ice.

AIRPORT TAXES: International and domestic airport taxes are charged. Most of the times, these taxes are already included in the air ticket. However please check it out before departure.

CLOTHING: Light clothes and comfortable shoes are recommended. Passengers should take sun glasses, sun block of strong protection and swimming clothes. A jacket is recommended as most of the places have strong air conditioning.

ELETRICITY: The electric current in Brazil can be either 110 V or 220 V, depending on the city. Most of the hotels have adaptors.

TELEPHONES: Public telephones accept phone cards that cost around R$ 20,00 and can be bought at local newspapers stands. Mobile phones: The main providers of GSM 1800 technologies are: TIM Brasil, OI and Claro. The Brazilian code for international calls is 00 + 55.

The regional codes for the main cities are:Rio de Janeiro: 21

SAO PAULO

With a population of around 10 million and an area of 1500 square km (3 times the size of Paris) it is the largest city in South America and the largest industrial center on the continent. This vast city of gleaming skyscrapers elevated freeways and enormous complexes has all come together fairly recently. Though founded in 1554, it was still a sleepy little town of 30,000 people as late as 1870. Coffee provided the first impetus for its meteoric growth and by 1960 its population had exceeded that of Rio. The increase in population was to a large extent, the result of well over one million Italian, half a million Portuguese, 400,000 Spanish and nearly 200,000 Japanese immigrants by the end of the 1930s. Many more from all over the world have arrived since the city is nothing if not cosmopolitan.

AMAZON

The term rainforest describes forests that grow in constant humid conditions. They can occur wherever the annual rainfall is above 2,000 millimeters (80 inches), even if it is spread throughout the year. The rather high temperatures favor plant development – i.e., above 20 degrees Celsius. The main characteristic of this humid, dense forest is the fact that the plants congregate in groups, which are organized in a distinctive manner within the ecosystem. Contrary to popular belief, tropical trees are not over-sized. Average total height in the Amazon Rainforest ranges 30 to 40 meters (100 to 133 feet). The Amazon Rainforest is the largest tropical forest in the world, covering 6 million km² in 9 different countries (in Brazil, circa of 60%). At a first look, the Amazon forest seems to be rather uniform in physiognomy but in fact there are many typological variations and ample species diversity. The forest canopy is frequently discontinuous, giving space for special ecological niches. At the heart of this region lies the huge Amazon River, the second longest watercourse of the world. The Amazon holds more than 20% of the planet's fresh water, has at least 1,000 tributaries. The Rio Negro is its largest tributary. The Amazon Rainforest actually includes four major vegetation types: Terra Firma Forest (upland forest) – located on higher grounds with no direct influence from rivers Várzea Forest (marshland forest) – seasonally flooded lowland forest. Igapó Forest – permanently flooded lowland forest. Catinga Forest – along Rio Negro, called Campirana as well. The extraordinary wealth of plant and animal life in the Amazon basin has attracted explorers and scientists since the dawn of the 16th century. At least 30,000 out of 100,000 species of plants in Latin America are found in the Brazilian Amazon. The wildlife is equally diverse: there are thousands of creatures, amazingly different but each ideally suited for this particular way of life in the jungle. Clearly, this is a world of enormous fascination to everyone interested in nature. The Amazon with its legends and myths are still an enigma for humanity.

Rio de Janeiro is located in the Southeastern zone, in the Atlantic Ocean coast. The city is privileged with a great geographical position with wide beaches and impressive mountains. Known as "Cidade Maravilhosa" – the marvelous city – Rio is a perfect combination of warm weather, beautiful sceneries, friendly people, music and happiness. A beauty that comes from its natural tropical environment where mountains, forests, beaches, lagoons, and vegetation form a dramatic back-drop.

The wonders of Rio can be admired from the top of the Sugar Loaf: impressive in its own height, it guards the entrance of the Guanabara Bay; and also by the feet of the Corcovado Statue that blesses the entire city with his open arms and dominates most of the Carioca skyline.

There are other equally inspiring mountains such as "Dois Irmãos" and the "Pedra da Gávea" to appreciate. There is also the Tijuca Forest, the largest urban forest in the world. Rio's other natural attractions include the beaches; the Botanical Garden; the Bay of Guanabara and Paqueta island; and the city's many parks and gardens. Man has also produced his own attractions which include the city's many museums and galleries that cover a wide range of topics and styles.

For all its natural beauty, Rio de Janeiro – with a population of around 6 million – is still one of the world's biggest and most populated cities. Therefore, Rio offers its visitors the infrastructure its status merits. It offers a wide selection of hotels, restaurants, bars; it has numerous exhibition and conference centers; the cultural and sporting scene is justifiably famous; the shops and stores are world class; the city has well developed telecommunications, banking, financial and medical services and an extensive transport system which allows visitors and residents to move around the city easily be it by car, taxi, bus, bicycle or on foot.

The city's 90 kilometers of beaches are an integral part of the Rio lifestyle. Rio has beaches that run through its very heart and they are a center of entertainment and relaxation for the residents and visiting population. Participant sports abound on the beaches. Soccer, volleyball, gymnastics, and more traditional Brazilian sports like "peteca" and "futevolei", are played out on the sands of Rio while out to sea, it is the surfers and windsurfers who rule the waves.

The pavements and paths that run along the top of the beaches are a playground for the city's cyclists, roller skaters and the people who simply want to walk, jog or sit and enjoy the scenery from a bench or the comfort of a small beach kiosk while having coconut water.

Discovered in 1502, Rio de Janeiro still has many vestiges of its historic past on show. Buildings which date from the 16th to the 19th centuries reflect the history and growth of Rio.

Nightlife and entertainment in Rio are great! In Lapa and Santa Teresa we can find the most typical bars playing old sambas in a setting that still preserves houses and old mansions. More sophisticated nightclubs can be found in Ipanema, Leblon, Barra and Gávea. Visitors who want to experience a little more of Brazil's own culture in its many shapes and forms, can enjoy spectacular shows aimed specifically at the tourist. Visitors are encouraged to pay a visit to one of the city's samba schools (when they start the rehearsals before carnival) or to one of the "gafieiras" with their steamy dancing.

Soccer is Rio's main spectator sports with crowds of 100,000 or more for the major games at the Maracanã Stadium, the world's largest stadium.

Besides all that, Rio has a great variety of food: tropical fruits, juices, the traditional barbecue and the delicious Feijoada (traditionally served for Saturday lunch by restaurants and hotels) and the Caipirinha – not easily forgotten after a trip to Brazil. Eating out ranges from the most sophisticated restaurants, all the way to the humblest of corner bars serving local snacks and delicacies, which are washed down by an ice cold draught beer or one of a variety of natural juices.

Morning Free

Sunset from Sugar Loaf

The famous beaches of Rio de Janeiro are surrounded by mountains. On one side stands is Sugarloaf Mountain (Pão de Açúcar). Rising a quarter mile into the air, Sugarloaf Mountain offers birds-eye views of Guanabara Bay and the city of Rio.

No setting could be more spectacular. The Sugar Loaf is composed of 2 hills. On arrival the guests will arrive at Morro da Urca and ascend to the top of Sugar Loaf by the cable car. They will enjoy the magnificent view of the city, as the sun begins to set and the lights begin to twinkle, while the city prepares itself for an entire night of fun to come.

Dinner at Assador steak House

300 years ago, the barbecue started in the south of the country. The BAKER was the one who prepared the meat, understood the cuts, knew the materials, the knives, the grills, and even the best ground to stick the wooden skewers into and start baking. The barbecue of that time was done anywhere, only by experts, who passed the knowledge to the children and grandchildren. Since then, almost nothing has changed. We brought all the barbecue ritual and the ancestor knowledge of the ASSADOR. The difference is that you can enjoy it all in one of the most charming places in Rio de Janeiro, with a privileged view of the Sugar Loaf. The soul of the Roaster remains the same. Just changed the story that the best barbecue is anywhere.

DAY 07 – Rio de Janeiro

Brazilian Breakfast at Hotel Restaurant

Morning - Visit the Corcovado and Tijuca Forest by Jeeps

The approach is perfect, a drive by Lagoa (lagoon) and a scenic train ride to the top of the mountain - passing by the OH! curve - when unexpectedly after a curve, the train is perched by the cliff and the view of the lagoon and beaches is unique and one of the New World 7 Wonders is right in front! The statue of Christ the Redeemer - an icon of Rio de Janeiro built (1926-1931) at 710 mt above sea level, 30 mt high, weighing 1,145 tons - at the feet of the statue, a small chapel (150 persons). A breathtaking view, where your eyes can see details of closeby buildings and mansions, the mountains at the back of the bay, the Sugar Loaf, Niterói and the ocean.

A visit to the statue of Christ the Redeemer – one of the 7 Wonders of the Wonders open its arms to welcome you!!

Lunch at Confeitaria Colombo

A living portrait of the Belle Époque in Rio, and one of the city's gourmet landmarks, the Confeitaria Colombo still retains much of its Art Nouveau charm dating back to the beginning of the century. Its famous Belgian mirrors in their hardwood frames and rosewood showcases, Italian marble benches, ornate light fixtures, glossy floor and period furniture have been preserved intact, just as they were admired by many famous individuals who helped write the history of Brazil, while also making the Confeitaria Colombo a major downtown attraction.

Time to Shopping at Saara

Located in the Historic Downtown, the Pólo Saara is considered to be the largest open air mall of the State of Rio de Janeiro. Composed of eleven streets on the surroundings of Alfândega St., it has over 88 stores, most of which cater to the popular market. At the end of the 19th century, the region was originally occupied by immigrants of different nationalities who opened up small family business. The buildings of Saara still preserve the original architecture of that time. The region is known as the Mecca of popular commerce and offers a variety of clothing stores, toy stores, souvenir stores and even some official Rio 2016 merchandise. The Pólo is in the same region that some touristic attractions, like the Campo de Santana, the Candelária Church and the Biblioteca Parque Estadual.
